With increasingly complex global supply chains, visibility is key

Escalating pressure on organizations to demonstrate responsible organizational behaviour is critical in today's business environment.

Supplier identities are becoming blurred due to numerous intermediaries such as agents, domestic importers, traders, middlemen and wholesalers which is further complicated by distance and geography.

Most companies acknowledge the fact that they know only 15% of their suppliers well, while the remaining 85%¹ – including facilities, people and processes – is unknown.

- Do they know their suppliers?
- Who are they?
- Where are they?
- Can they be relied upon?

Procurement professionals can find it extremely difficult to source new suppliers or differentiate real supplier facilities from agents or intermediaries. As a result visibility, transparency and trust is low due to complex and fragmented supply chain partners.

BSI VerifEye™ Directory is unique as it only includes factories and facilities that have been visited by BSI thus ensuring that all the information displayed on the directory has been verified onsite by BSI auditors.

81% of businesses experienced at least one supply chain disruption last year²

Only 15% believe their supply chain is resilient enough to address the threat of external disruptions³

50% of respondents said that supply chain transparency was a priority⁴.
