

Enabling business transformation through embracing privacy and data protection compliance

How BSI helped a global pharmaceutical operationalize the office of the Data Protection Officer (DPO) and meet real-world compliance challenges

BSI's client is a multinational, specialty pharmaceutical company, with headquarters in Quebec, Canada. Originally founded in the 1950's, today the organization's products are used by over 150 million people each day, in more than 90 countries around the world.

Operating in the competitive pharmaceutical, medical device and health science industries, our client spans a large part of the globe. The organization has evolved many times in its history with a series of acquisitions and divestments that have continued right up to the present day, presenting a complicated landscape of regulatory and legal compliance requirements.

The challenge

Europe's General Data Protection Regulation (GDPR) was seen as a line in the sand for privacy professionals, compliance officers, legal departments and data protection authorities the world over. Global organizations operating in Europe or offering services into Europe needed to ready themselves ahead of the May 2018 deadline of the GDPR coming into full force for a new normal in data protection.

With significant operations in Europe, and as an organization that obtains and processes significant volumes of personal data, our client approached the impending GDPR deadline of 25 May 2018 as many others did – a strategic implementation program was mobilized to assess and remediate compliance gaps.

However, our client was acutely aware that the deadline passing was only the beginning of the compliance
